INTELLIGENCE BRIEFS

A group that calls itself the Washitaw Nation has begun an intensive marketing campaign aimed at "sovereign citizens." Individuals who become citizens of the Washitaw Nation can purchase birth certificates ($65), passports ($200) and driver's licenses ($100). Membership, which is open to anyone born on the North American continent, frees an individual from paying federal and state income tax, an article on the group's Internet site claims. Washitaw is also running ads in Patriot publications.

The Washitaw Nation claims to descend from "indigenous" North American people whose land was illegally taken from them by the Louisiana Purchase. In 1993, according to the group's propaganda, some 68,000 acres were returned to the living heir of the Washitaw Nation, thus reestablishing a sovereign nation within the boundaries of the United States.

Though the literature of the organization implies that the group is Native American, a Washitaw video features a lengthy presentation by the "Empress" of the group, as well as shorter speeches by two other members, all three of whom are black.

Washitaw Nation has established close ties with the Republic of Texas (ROT), which claims that the state of Texas was illegally annexed into the United States in the 1840s. ROT officials claim that their "treaty" with Washitaw Nation gives their movement international status and frees members from following Texas and U.S. laws. ROT vice president Stephen Crear gave a presentation on Washitaw Nation at a recent meeting in Corsicana. Crear, who is black, told attendees he was the "liaison" between the Republic and Washitaw.

In November, federal authorities arrested D. Norville Calhoun and J. Ricardo Hernandez on bank fraud charges, according to a story in the Patriot publication American's Bulletin. One of the men was a member of the Republic of Texas while another was an official of Washitaw Nation, the story said.

Washitaw may also have ties to established black nationalist groups. The lengthy name of the Washitaw Nation empress includes the phrase "el-Bey," which is typically used by individuals associated with the Moorish Science Temple. Founded in the early 20th Century, Moorish Science Temple espouses a creed of black sovereignty. ▲

As the trial of accused Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh approaches, more information about his extremist interests is surfacing. An FBI interview with a security guard who worked with McVeigh in New York revealed that he frequently talked about the Christian Identity religion, received book catalogs from the National Alliance's National Vanguard Books and read The White Patriot, a publication of the Invisible Empire Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Investigators have long known about McVeigh's connection to the Patriot movement and his obsession with The Turner Diaries. McVeigh's phone records show a number of calls to National Alliance headquarters in West Virginia and to the Arizona state leader of the neo-Nazi group.

Timothy McVeigh frequently discussed Christian Identity beliefs.

McVeigh goes on trial March 31 in Denver. The government says the case will take three to four months, but McVeigh's lawyer, Steven Jones, says longer. Jones is expected to present an alternate explanation of who blew up the Murrah Federal Building, killing 168 people. ▲

While church arsons were occupying the attention of the public in 1996, another equally insidious hate crime was raging, — a dramatic increase in the number of crossburnings in the United States. By year's end, Klanwatch had documented 51 crossburnings, up from 29 in 1995.

The incidents occurred throughout the United States. Blacks were most frequently targeted, including many who recently moved into predominantly white neighborhoods. Gays were also harassed by crossburners, as were bi-racial couples.

Crossburnings are historically associated with the Ku Klux Klan, but today these hate crimes are generally the work of individuals unaffiliated with hate groups. Their racist connotation makes them a powerful form of terror and one that deserves a forceful response from law enforcement. ▲

Florida Klan leader John Baumgardner took his message of racial separation to St. Petersburg days after the October riots in the city's black community. Baumgardner, who heads up the Florida Black Knights, appeared publicly with representatives of the Pan-African International Movement (PAIN), a black nationalist group based in Orlando.

Like many Klansmen, Baumgardner advocates an all-white society. But he has taken a different tact in promoting his beliefs through his alliance with PAIN, which also advocates racial division.

In his newsletter, the Florida InterKlan Report, Baumgardner wrote: "If we could make one appeal to the rioters it would be to heed the call to separate or at least direct the rage against the real enemy. Burn down government buildings. Loot federal courthouses. Bring the system crashing down and we will help you. But beware, we intend to have a place in the sun and if you try to kill us (white separatists) we will surely kill you first." ▲

According to a letter from Aryan Nations leader Richard Butler to the organization's members, Ambassador-at-large Louis Beam has withdrawn from "active participation" in the organization because of poor health brought on by exposure to Agent Orange. A veteran of the white supremacist movement, Beam is credited with igniting the resurgence of Aryan Nations in recent years.

On a recent posting to his World Wide Web Site, Beam claimed that he was suffering medical problems as a result of his exposure to toxic chemicals during his Vietnam tour of duty.

Beam's departure comes amid a staff shakeup at the Aryan Nations headquarters in Hayden Lake, Idaho. Michael Teague is the new staff leader, replacing Jerry Gruidl who is now overseeing Aryan Nations' Internet site. Teague's wife Christian serves as secretary at the Idaho compound. The Teagues are from Arizona and are reportedly tied to longtime neo-Nazi Jeff Dissell.

"Extra expenses incurred from winter's onslaught," in the words of Butler, have forced Aryan Nations to cancel this year's Youth Congress, originally scheduled for April. Butler said in his letter that youth activities will be incorporated into the annual Aryan National Congress, scheduled for July 25-27. "We will have a local celebration for Adolf Hitler [on] April 20, a true hero of our race," Butler assured the faithful in his letter. ▲

YEAR IN REVIEW 1996

A new approach to negotiating with extremists led to the peaceful conclusion of the Freeman standoff.

With the public increasingly concerned about the threat of domestic terrorism, law enforcement authorities attacked political violence and subversion with a new seriousness of purpose in 1996. Federal agencies arrested scores of right-wing extremists and broke up clandestine groups plotting anti-government activity.

The emerging counter-terrorism strategy reflects the lessons that federal agencies have learned from the events of recent years. The Oklahoma City bombing dictated the need for aggressively dealing with the threat of violence. The tragic incidents at Ruby Ridge and Waco — which launched the modern militia movement — underscored the value of patience in confrontations with armed extremists.

Federal agents launched preemptive strikes on four major militia-based bombing conspiracies in 1996. In each of the cases, militia members were targeting government buildings or officials for attack. Critics accused the government of over-reacting, but the early action may have prevented another tragedy.

In Justus Township, Mont., the FBI laid siege to a compound harboring a group who called themselves Freeman. Wanted in connection with a fraudulent check scheme, the Freeman held out for 81 days before surrendering without bloodshed — a markedly different conclusion than at Ruby Ridge and Waco. The peaceful conclusion can be attributed to the FBI's carefully calibrated increase in pressure, the use of intermediaries sympathetic to the Freeman's cause (Bo Gritz, Charles

STRIKING BACK AGAINST TERROR

Duke and Kirk Lyons) and the isolation of the group from others on the Right.

The Freeman arrests were part of a nationwide crackdown on the common-law court movement. Dozens of individuals accused of "paper terrorism" — filing bogus liens, fraudulent check schemes, issuing phony arrest warrants for public officials — faced federal and state charges, and many have already been sent to jail.

Information derived from the arrests in 1996 helped define the contours of anti-government activity in the country. Investigations of bank robberies and explosions in the Midwest and Pacific Northwest point to the existence of a terrorist underground, decentralized in structure but knit together by a religious commitment to overthrowing the government. This antipathy to American democracy is driven by a racist, anti-Semitic theology that envisions the establishment — by violence if necessary — of a white nation within the borders of the United States.

Some members of these groups adhere to the radical credo of the Phineas Priesthood: they believe murder, kidnapping, armed robbery and counterfeiting are justified in the name of "God's law." Experts fear that the growth of religious-based terrorism could lead to more deadly incidents in the year ahead.

"This combination of religion and terrorism is not new, but has, until recently, been eclipsed by terrorism conducted by nationalist-separatist groups," according to Gary Perlstein, professor of criminology at Portland

Nikar/Lethikova Oy SABA

The bombing of Centennial Park in Atlanta remains the major unsolved incidence of domestic terrorism in 1996.

State University and author of several works on domestic terrorism. "Studies have shown that the combination of religion and terrorism increases the lethality of terrorist acts because there are fewer inhibitions on the wish to commit wide-scale violence."

There were some high-profile disappointments in the fight against domestic subversion in 1996. Still listed as possible cases of terrorism, though as yet unsolved, are the pipe bombing of Centennial Park during the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta and the 1995 explosion that derailed an Amtrak train in Arizona. The failure to make an arrest in the Olympic bombing case and the Richard Jewell fiasco undermined the credibility of the FBI, which had won plaudits for its handling of the Freeman standoff. Initially investigated as a terrorist incident, the crash of TWA Flight 800 appears to have been the result of a mechanical malfunction, authorities now say.

Congress continued to disagree over the proper response to anti-government violence. Members passed a bill that added 500 new agents to the anti-terrorism section in the FBI, but balked at additional measures that some experts feel are needed to counter violent extremists. They voted down expanded wiretap authority and a requirement that manufacturers tag explosive materials.

Scholars who research domestic terrorism suggest that conditions are ripe for incidents in the year 1997 (See stories, pages 10-13). Of particular interest is the approach of the year 2000, which has spawned a millenarian movement that foresees a total reshaping of the world by century's end. Perlstein: "I am concerned that some members might try to accelerate the transformation through acts of violence." ▲

KEY TERRORIST-RELATED EVENTS IN 1996

AP/Wide World Photos

ARA leader Peter Langan under arrest.

JANUARY 15 FBI arrests Richard Guthrie on charges that he robbed banks in seven Midwestern states. Three days later, authorities arrest Peter Langan on the same charges. Langan tells investigators that he and Guthrie are part of an underground faction called the Aryan Republican Army that seeks the violent overthrow of the U.S. government. Searches of their property turn up sophisticated weaponry and white supremacist literature from Aryan Nations and other hate groups. Two other ARA members, Scott Stedford and Kevin McCarthy, are arrested in May. Guthrie and McCarthy turn state's evidence and provide information that helps convict Stedford on several of the bank robbery charges. (Guthrie was later found hung in his cell.)

MARCH 25 Authorities arrest Freeman leader Leroy Schweitzer in connection with bogus checks, prompting an 81-day standoff at Justus Township in Montana.

APRIL 11 Authorities charge an anti-government activist with illegally possessing an explosive device after finding bomb-making materials on his property in Hood River, Ore. Among the items discovered are 460 pounds of the gel-type high explosive Tovex, 746 pounds of Anfo blasting agent and 15 homemade hand grenades. In October, Hamblin is convicted on the charges and sentenced to 44 months in a federal prison.

APRIL 24 The president signs a bill to increase funding for counter-terrorist activities. Later in the year, the FBI announces that it will double the number of agents assigned to combat terrorism.

•Ray Lampley, his wife and two others are convicted of plotting to blow up the Southern Poverty Law Center, the Houston office of the Anti-Defamation League, gay bars and abortion clinics. An FBI informant says later that Lampley's group was one of over a dozen cells operating in Oklahoma.

APRIL 26 Two leaders of the Militia-at-Large for the Republic of Georgia are charged with conspiracy to possess explosive devices after allegedly planning to construct homemade shrapnel bombs for distribution among militia members. In June, the purported leader of the militia's "special operations team" is arrested on charges of conspiring to possess bombs and having an unregistered destructive device. All three are convicted in November 1996.

FBI agents arrest Georgia militia leader Robert Starr on weapons and explosives charges.

MAY 20 A small bomb is detonated outside a Laredo, Texas, building where FBI offices are located.

JUNE 12 Federal jurors convict Patriot leader Gerald Henson on charges that he promoted and sold bogus money orders. Henson is a founder of United Sovereigns of America, one of the leading suppliers of books, forms and other documents used by common-law courts around the country.

JULY 1 Twelve members of an Arizona militia group called Viper Team are arrested on conspiracy, weapons and explosive violations. Ten of the 12 members plead guilty in December.

JULY 27 A bomb goes off in the early morning hours at Centennial Park in Atlanta, where Olympics-related activities are taking place. The bomb kills one bystander and injures numerous others.

JULY 29 Five members of the Washington State Militia, including leader John Pitner, and four common-law court adherents from Seattle are arrested on weapons and explosives charges. They are accused of conspiring to make and possess pipe bombs for use in a confrontation with the federal government. Trial was scheduled for January 1997.

AUGUST In the wake of the TWA crash and the Olympic bombing, several congressmen propose anti-terrorist legislation that would require chemical tagging of gunpowder and expand the government's wiretap authority. The effort fails.

SEPTEMBER 18 In an interview on the CBS Evening News, convicted bank robber Walter Thody claims that some 200 people throughout the country — including African-Americans — are devotees of the Phineas Priesthood.

OCTOBER 8 Three men are arrested on weapons, explosives, robbery and conspiracy charges in connection with pipe bombings of a bank, a newspaper and a Planned Parenthood clinic in Spokane, Wash. Documents left at the crime scene indicate that the suspects are Phineas Priests.

OCTOBER 11 Law enforcement authorities arrest seven men tied to a West Virginia militia group in connection with a plan to blow up an FBI complex near Clarksburg, W. Va. At least one of the plotters believed the facility would be the command center when the "new world order" moved against American citizens.

NOVEMBER 5 Concerned about their state's reputation for extremism, voters in Montana pass Initiative 123 that would make it easier to sue people accused of threatening or intimidating. The measure also bans filing of bogus property liens. ▲

CROSSING THE THRESHOLD

THE INCREASING THREAT OF BIOCHEMICAL TERRORISM HAS SECURITY EXPERTS ON HIGH ALERT

A microbiologist with neo-Nazi connections has provided the extremist underground with a detailed blueprint for waging biological terrorism.

Larry Wayne Harris, 44, of Columbus, Ohio, claims that his self-published Bacteriological Warfare: A Major Threat To North America is designed to help readers survive a biological attack. But the scope and depth of information in the book also make it an effective do-it-yourself manual for mass destruction through biological terrorism.

Publication of the book comes at a time when the Patriot movement is awash in rumors about impending biological warfare against Americans. Harris, a lieutenant in the Ohio chapter of Aryan Nations, actively promotes this theory.

Harris released his guide to plague warfare in late 1995 and is selling it for $28.50 over the Internet and on Florida anti-abortion leader Jeff Baker's short-wave radio broadcasts. He plundered U.S. Army technical and field manuals for the material included in the book.

Bacteriological Warfare is a solidly researched — if sometimes bizarre — guide to the cultivation, retention and deployment of biological agents. The 131-page book provides extensive information on a host of deadly bacteria and the diseases they produce. Special focus is given to five potent biological agents: anthrax, bacillary dysentery, brucellosis, cholera and bubonic plague. Harris also includes detailed instructions for preparing the antibiotic terramycin, an essential substance in handling deadly biological agents in substandard laboratory conditions.

A former member of the National Alliance, Harris came to national attention in May 1995 after officials at a research laboratory became suspicious of his purchase of four vials of freeze-dried, bubonic plague cultures. They tipped off law enforcement agents.

Authorities soon determined, to their amazement, that the purchase and possession of this extremely virulent form of bacterium was not illegal. Federal prosecutors were able to charge Harris with three counts of mail fraud and one count of wire fraud because he

The sarin attack on a Japanese subway by Aum Shinrikyo represented a dangerous escalation of biochemical terrorism.

Action Press/SABA

Larry Wayne Harris bought three pure strains of bubonic plague from a Maryland laboratory. He is the author of a new work on biological terrorism had given his Ohio employer's state lab permit number for a personal delivery to his home. In December 1995, he plea-bargained down to one wire fraud count in return for a guilty plea.

Harris told authorities he bought the bubonic plague cultures in order to concoct an antidote to the disease.

HEIGHTENED AWARENESS

The publication of Bacteriological Warfare: A Major Threat To North America comes at a time of heightened awareness of the threat of biological and chemical terrorism. The anthrax and sarin attacks in Japan by Aum Shinrikyo, a fanatical sect of anti-government zealots, have alerted security officials worldwide that the deployment of biological or chemical warfare agents into a populated area is not beyond the capabilities — or the will — of a small band of enterprising terrorists. "The attack in Japan has global implications," warned Yonah Alexander, an Israeli terrorism expert.

Counter-terrorism experts are currently conducting an intensive dialogue on biological and chemical attack. Their research highlights these dangers:

Biological agents can be delivered to a target in a variety of ways, some requiring minimal technical skills.

Bacterium and viruses can be easily introduced into a building's ventilation system with small aerosol canisters or simple insecticide sprayers. Dispersal of bacterium spores by explosive devices or high-powered rocket warheads is feasible. Effective mass destruction could be accomplished with a payload aboard a single-engine Cessna like the one that crashed into the White House in 1995. (In his book, Harris describes the Cessna 150 as an ideal craft for such a biological attack.)

"If one crazed amateur can violate the airspace of what is supposed to be the most secure building in America and leave his plane piled up a few feet below the President's bedroom, a dedicated terrorist can manage a successful airborne biochemical attack of any major city in the country," says Michael Reynolds, senior intelligence analyst for Klanwatch.

Cultivation of a biological warfare agent does not require expensive equipment or a large space.

According to one specialist in the field, an investment of $10,000 and a 15' x 15' room is all that is necessary to produce enough bacterium to satisfy the requirements of a national arsenal. Harris showed just how easy it is to obtain virulent bacterium through the mail. Viruses and toxins useful to the terrorist can just as easily be stolen.

"Approximately 1 million patients per year in the United States and Europe receive botulinum toxin injections as therapy for a variety of diseases," writes John F. Sopko, deputy chief counsel to the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, in a recent issue of Foreign Policy. "These deadly toxins, as well as the research that supports their use, can easily be accessed by would-be proliferants or terrorists without attracting the attention of most intelligence sources."

Former Under Secretary of the Navy Richard Danzig observed in a January 1996 Institute For National Strategic Studies report, "The argument that chemical weapons are too difficult for most terrorists to manufacture was discredited when a CIA report concluded that clandestine production of chemical and biological weapons for multiple casualty attacks raises no greater technical obstacles than does the clandestine production of chemical narcotics or heroin."

Small quantities of biological agents can be lethal.

Of these, the most deadly is anthrax. One gram of this deadly organism produces 1 trillion spores — an amount equivalent to 100 million lethal doses, according to the Institute for National Strategic Studies report.

Law enforcement faces extraordinary difficulties in solving biological and chemical terrorism cases.

"The alternative delivery methods for deploying biological and chemical weapons of mass destruction usually leave few clues to identify who is responsible," writes Sapko in his Foreign Policy article.

The apocalyptic outlook of many terrorists today makes such attacks much more likely. "Past assumptions that those in possession of weapons of mass destruction are rational, informed opponents who calculate the risks and benefits before using such force do not apply when these groups are driven by 'divine intervention,' messianic leadership, or suicidal instincts," writes Sapko.

THE PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN

In the preface to his book, Harris recounts a fantastic tale of a 1993 encounter with a female Iraqi microbiologist at the Ohio State library. Harris writes that this woman — called "Mariam" — was a member of a terrorist band preparing to unleash biological attacks in the United States "some time in the next few years."

Harris continues to spread this story of the “coming biological attack against U.S. citizens” through video and audio tapes that are sold in the January 1997 issue of The Patriot Report, published by Identity proselytizer George Eaton. According to Harris, Iraqi agents are already in place throughout the country ready to strike urban areas with plague and anthrax.

The Patriot movement today is rife with propaganda about an impending biological attack on American citizens, possibly launched by the federal government itself. This campaign ominously echoes a propaganda blitzkrieg launched by Patriots and militias in the months before the Oklahoma City bombing. By April 19, 1995, extremist publications, fax networks and meetings were saturated with dire warnings that “something big” was about to happen — an operation the New World Order in Washington, D.C., would carry out and then blame on Patriots. “Today, the Patriot propaganda machine has laid the groundwork for blaming an incident of biological terrorism on the American government,” says Klan-watch’s Reynolds.

Harris and an ad hoc group of writers and quasi-scientists, including former U.S. Army nurse Joyce Riley, are promulgating a theory known as “The Gulf War Syndrome Cover-Up” that has gained widespread credence in the Patriot movement. They claim that the U.S. government and the Pentagon deliberately exposed American troops in the Persian Gulf War to biological agents which then produced the mysterious malady afflicting veterans of the conflict. Gulf War Syndrome is just one phase of a plan to reduce the U.S. population through biological attacks on an unwitting public — especially Patriots — and leave the survivors under the yoke of the New World Order, they further assert.

One of the earliest versions of this propaganda appeared in a confidential memo circulated to Aryan Nations members nationwide in mid-1995. The four-page document charged that an “extremely contagious biological agent was transferred directly to Iraq who (sic) used it on our troops during Desert Storm.”

The Aryan Nations letter claimed this was done “under the watchful eye of the [Z]ionist occupied government.” Furthermore, according to the neo-Nazi missive, “transmission to the civilian population is very much to be taken for granted in the furtherance of a Z.O.G. population control program.”

To bolster his credibility, the Aryan Nations writer appended a portion of a letter from Garth Nicholson, a Houston-based research scientist whose questionable theories on the Gulf War Syndrome are a cornerstone of the Patriot propaganda campaign. Nicholson charges that “HIV-1 (the AIDS virus) was one of approximately 10 such viruses constructed at Ft. Detrick, Md., as biological weapons and field tested in Africa and Haiti. Unfortunately, the experiment got out of hand.” Nicholson’s version of AIDS fits well within the extremist right’s “AIDS cover-up” conspiracy that has been hawked for years by Patriot and racist newspapers.

Since January 1995, Identity news media including The Jubilee, Aryan Nations’ Calling Our Nation and Dave Barley’s America’s Promise have joined with other extremist right publications like Militia of Montana’s Taking Aim, The Spotlight, The American’s Bulletin, Anti-Shyster and The Free American in a massive fear-mongering campaign warning of “biological genocide” at the hands of the federal government. The articles in these publications are nearly identical. The same material can be found on the American Patriot Fax Network, short-wave broadcasts, videos, and at Preparedness Expos and Identity meetings.

Extremists on the Right have long flirted with biological and chemical warfare against U.S. targets. Federal agents found 33 gallons of cyanide when they invaded The Covenant, The Sword and Arm of the Lord compound in northwestern Arkansas in 1985. CSA leader James Ellison said he and extremist Bob Miles had discussed poisoning municipal water supplies. Four members of the Minnesota Patriots Council were convicted in 1995 of conspiracy to use the deadly toxin ricin to kill federal agents and law enforcement officers.

The overheated discussion of this issue in the Patriot underground and the availability of manuals like Bacteriological Warfare puts the threat level in this country at an all-time high. Says Reynolds, “It is only a matter of time before some unknown ‘cell’ of zealots strikes a government facility or civilian community with home-grown biological or chemical agents.” ▲

Former U.S. Army nurse Joyce Riley claims that the government deliberately exposed American troops in the Persian Gulf War to biological agents.

THE FUTURE OF TER

Klanwatch asked several of the nation's most prominent students of terrorism to provide their assessment of the threat of subversive violence in the United States today. Their essays highlight the changing tactics of anti-government groups and the dangers posed by new technologies and political alliances.

AN UNHOLY ALLIANCE

The Internationalization of Domestic Terrorism

by STEPHEN SLOAN

The bombing of the World Trade Center in 1993 signaled a new chapter in the annals of terrorism in the United States. The act affirmed the reality that America was not immune to massive terrorist attacks. Perhaps even more ominous was the realization that international terrorists could develop the organizational and operational capabilities to "bring the war home" to American soil. The bombing heralded the pernicious development of the internationalization of domestic terrorism.

As a new year unfolds, we may well witness a variant to that development — the emergence of what one senior law enforcement official has called "seamless terrorism," where the line between foreign and domestic terrorists operating within the United States may be blurred, or even become invisible. Foreign and domestic terrorist groups could well enter into a dangerous marriage of convenience in which they share intelligence through the Internet, form clandestine infrastructures and develop the capability to engage in joint operations in the U.S. A marriage of convenience may also take place in which one group manipulates another without its knowledge, or one group contracts out to another as a terrorist mercenary force.

This short-term union would likely be fueled by a shared hatred of the United States government: in the case of domestic groups, the animus stems from the view that authorities are infringing on their rights; foreign groups perceive Washington to be the major enemy of their effort to seek their own versions of liberation based on the most primordial loyalties. These "True Believers," whether home-grown or foreign-based, may also manifest the intolerance and justification for violence employed by religious extremists of different faiths. They may act with a self-righteousness that negates any concern about public opinion and consequently not be selective in their choice of targets since they have declared a war against all.

With the absence of constraints, these groups may initiate a new and even more lethal phase in domestic terrorism, a phase which began on March 20, 1995, when a Japanese cult — the Aum Shin-rikyo — engaged in a sarin gas attack in the Tokyo subway. Mass or "super-terrorism" in the form of chemical, biological and nuclear attacks now pose an increasingly lethal threat to an American public still traumatized by the bombing of the World Trade Center and the Federal Building in Oklahoma City.

This assessment does not downplay the possibility of increased resort to threats and acts of "conventional terrorism" and mass or "super terrorism" by small domestic extremist groups who act independently in the pursuit of their violent agendas. It does however forewarn of a possible unholy alliance of foreign and domestic groups who may have the motivation and capability to jointly conduct operations which could result in massive loss of life. ▲

TERRORISM IN THE U.S.

AP/Wide World Photos

The 1995 bombing of a section of track that caused the derailment of an Amtrak train may reflect tactical changes in the anti-government movement

PURSuing THE TERRORIST Changing Legal Strategies

by BRENT L. SMITH

Terrorist tactics have changed markedly over the years to counter the investigatory and prosecutorial strategies developed by governmental authorities. Three current incidents of suspected right-wing terrorism (the Arizona train derailment, the Oklahoma City bombing and the Olympic bombing) may reflect tactical changes intended to minimize the civil and criminal liability of group members. Dubbed "leaderless resistance" by Louis Beam, this new organizational model is an outgrowth of the dismal failure of the "war in '84," which led to the wholesale arrests and convictions of right-wing terrorists from 1984 to 1988, as well as the seditious conspiracy trial of right-wing leaders in Fort Smith, Ark. in 1988.

"Leaderless resistance" will make it more difficult to continue to use the type of investigatory strategies which were so successful against the extreme Right during the 1980s. Use of the model has two major implications for investigators and prosecutors. First, longer periods of time will be required to infiltrate militant groups and violent underground cells. That demand will conflict with the Attorney General's guidelines for federal terrorism investigations that require the establishment of a criminal predicate in a specified period of time or else investigations must be halted.

Second, the model may preclude the creation of major racketeering, RICO, and seditious conspiracy cases of the type that dominated prosecution of the extreme Right in recent years. Such cases were more viable during the 1980s when the national networking and recruiting strategies of the extreme Right made it easier to infiltrate these groups. Once arrested, members of these groups turned state's evidence in droves: the "Silent Brotherhood" was anything but silent once arrested. But the "silence" emanating from the investigation of the Arizona train derailment and the Olympic bombing, as well as the silence of the alleged perpetrators of the Oklahoma City bombing, are ominous warnings of the prosecutorial difficulties posed by utilization of a cellular model.

The federal government has learned a great deal about responding to terrorism, however, and there is cause for optimism. Congress avoided the pitfall of trying to create a crime of "terrorism" when it passed the Antiterrorism Act of 1990. The law provides for enhanced sentencing for terrorists based upon target selection rather than the constitutionally questionable issue of political motivation. Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols will be among the first to be tried under these statutes.

Also, the use of "leaderless resistance" may force federal investigators and prosecutors to resort to charges involving "common criminality" rather than the use of "terrorism-specific" statutes. Rather than undermining terrorism cases, however, this approach has numerous benefits. First, it avoids dramatizing the political motives of the terrorists through the use of "presumed" or "strict liability" statutes that do not require proof of intent. Political motive, that bottomless quagmire for prosecutors, does not even have to be raised. Second, despite the utilization of federal sentencing guidelines intended to minimize disparity in sentencing, terrorists convicted of "traditional" crimes find themselves sentenced, on average, to three times the length of sentences given nonterrorists convicted of the same offenses.

The change in right-wing tactics may necessitate a further shift in investigative and prosecutorial strategies in the years ahead. Currently, the Attorney General's guidelines specify that terrorism investigations are concerned with "entire enterprises rather than individual participants and specific criminal acts." As such, conviction of the actual perpetrators of terrorist incidents is secondary to dismantling the organization that spawned the violence. But "leaderless resistance" and public demand for the punishment of the actual perpetrators of particularly heinous terrorist incidents, like Oklahoma City, may impede the ability of federal officials to implement this approach. ▲

by FRANK J. CILLUFFO and CURT H. GERGELY

While U.S. interests abroad have long been a favorite terrorist target, we have not had to cope with large-scale subversive violence at home. In the aftermath of Oklahoma City, it became clear that the sanguinity we had grown accustomed to over the years was no longer tenable or prudent. The growth of the domestic terrorist threat has coincided with the emergence of extreme right-wing organizations such as the Patriot and militia movements, and Christian Identity groups advocating the violent overthrow of the government.

Future trends for domestic terrorism cannot necessarily be discerned from current activities. Exacerbating the situation is the fact that terrorism tends to germinate within small cells that, in this case, would make it very difficult to discern incipient violence against the backdrop of the larger movement. Nevertheless, we fear that the Patriot Movement poses a significant threat to our nation's security, for these reasons:

Right-wing extremists have demonstrated a propensity to engage in indiscriminate violence to achieve their goals. The recent arrest of individuals attempting to develop biological weapons suggests that these groups may be willing to engage in attacks that could cause mass casualties. Similarly, domestic groups have shown an increased interest in attacking basic infrastructure systems such as telecommunications networks, pipeline systems, railroads and the electric power system. The information and materials necessary to conduct extremely damaging attacks are available to terrorists and, depending on the facility attacked, could result in sustained outages effecting large population areas.

Right-wing extremists have devised a long-range strategy for terrorist attacks. Militias have developed sophisticated intelligence collection capabilities for acquiring targeting data on key infrastructure elements, military storage facilities, and the whereabouts of local and national leaders. These groups are forging loose alliances to share this information and to engage in joint operational planning.

Sophisticated communications networks are linking like-minded but geographically dispersed groups. Right-wing extremists are very skillfully using the Internet for covert communications, intelligence dissemination, operational planning and propaganda activities. (There are now 70 World Wide Web pages and 150 Usenets openly associated with Patriot or Identity groups, as well as clandestine Internet networks, protected by robust encryption.). Taken together, these assets provide an invaluable venue for

by WALTER LAQUEUR

(Excerpted from "Postmodern Terrorism," by Walter Laqueur. Reprinted by permission of Foreign Affairs, September/October 1996. Copyright 1996 by the Council on Foreign Relations, Inc.)

Society has become vulnerable to a new kind of terrorism, in which the destructive power of both the individual terrorist and terrorism as a tactic are infinitely greater. Earlier terrorists could kill kings or high officials, but others only too eager to inherit their mantle quickly stepped in. The advanced societies of today are more dependent every day on the electronic storage, retrieval, analysis and transmission of information. Defense, the police, banking, trade, transportation, scientific work, and a large percentage of the government's and the private sector's transactions are on-line. That exposes enormous vital areas of national life to mischief or sabotage by any computer hacker, and concerted sabotage could render a country unable to function. Hence the growing speculation about infoterrorism and cyberwarfare.

An unnamed U.S. intelligence official has boasted that with $1 billion he could shut down America. What he could achieve, a terrorist could too. There is little secrecy in the wired society, and protective measures have proved of limited value: teenage hackers have penetrated highly secret systems in every field. The possibilities for creating chaos are almost unlimited even now, and vulnerability will almost certainly increase. Terrorists' targets will change: why assassinate a politician or indiscriminately kill people when an attack on electronic switching will produce far more dramatic and lasting results? The switch at the Culpepper, Va., headquarters of the Federal Reserve's electronic network, which handles all federal funds and transactions, would be an obvious place to hit. If the new terrorism directs its energies toward information warfare, its destructive power will be exponentially greater than any it wielded in the past — greater even than it would be with biological and chemical weapons. ▲ command and control and propaganda dissemination, especially in the event of an armed conflict. The ability to rapidly pass information on a worldwide basis from sophisticated headquarters to scattered clandestine cells provides terrorists with opportunities never dreamed of in the past. These "virtual" safe havens also aid fundraising and recruitment and even provide a sense of belonging — reaffirming shared, albeit aberrant, attitudes.

A wide range of weapons is available to right-wing extremists. Militia members have been apprehended with sophisticated night-vision equipment, scanners for monitoring local and federal law enforcement, automatic weapons, high explosives, encrypted radios and chemical-protection equipment.

Taken together, these trends warn of a drastically increased threat from domestic terrorists. Elected officials face a difficult challenge: how to strengthen law enforcement, which is the most effective shield against domestic terrorism, while maintaining our personal liberties. ▲

SOURCES OF TERRORISM A Hierarchy of Probability

by WILLIAM H. EUBANK

Terrorism will occur next year in the United States. Who or what then are the most likely terrorists and forms of terrorism?

Foreign governments are the least likely source. The consequence of state-sponsored terrorism, particularly if applied to targets in the United States, is direct retaliation that governments would seek to avoid. Any state terrorism against the United States, domestically or internationally, would necessarily be the result of a very deliberate and calculated policy and, given the consequences, unlikely.

The next most likely perpetrators of terrorism are those who feel that they can in some way affect United States policy and/or bring attention to a cause. Here the most likely sources are groups of individuals who are dedicated to an issue and want to draw attention to it with some spectacular event. Well-organized terrorist groups, probably international in character such as Hamas or Tupac Amaru, are likely candidates, as are domestic groups such as the militias or radical environmentalists.

An even more likely scenario is terrorism that is carried out by marginalized and frustrated individuals seeking to protest the flow of events, such as followers of the right-to-life movement, opponents of federal land management policies in the West, or those opposed to technological progress, like accused Unabomber Theodore Kaczynski. Domestic policies that directly threaten traditional ways of living will provoke some to action. In the United States the most likely policies to do so are environmental and social. This will probably occur on a more or less continual basis. The recent bombings of abortion clinics are examples of this phenomenon.

Finally, the most likely "terrorists" are those who act on a lark, in an unwitting and random manner — the individual who vandalizes a black church on a dare or sets off a pipe bomb out of curiosity. Though this is not terrorism in its ordinary sense, it should be thought of as such. Either the target (the church) or the tactic (a bombing), or some combination of both, mimic typical acts of terrorism. The result is an increased level of fear and concern among the populace. Because there is no underlying coherent political motivation, such incidents are usually treated as an ordinary crime. This type of terrorism is the one that will most frequently recur in 1997, possibly on a weekly basis. ▲

For several months in 1996, a gang of Skinheads harassed the residents of the Boston suburb of Franklin. In October, their obnoxious behavior turned deadly.

A half-dozen members of the unnamed group showed up uninvited at a pre-Halloween bash in the neighboring town of Norfolk. The Skinheads mingled with the guests for several hours but were shown the door after they began drawing swastikas on their hands. They promised to return and did — with reinforcements.

Amid shouts of “you’re gonna die,” over a dozen members of the group invaded the party, wielding knives, chains, pipes, an ax handle and a broomstick, according to police and media reports. The Skinheads directed most of their rage at 22-year-old Jayson Linsky, the young man who had originally ousted them from the party. After Linsky was knocked to the ground, the leader of the group — a longtime Skinhead who had moved to the area from the Midwest after serving jail time for rape and robbery — straddled the victim’s beaten body and allegedly stabbed him nine times, according to police. Linsky died in the arms of his fiancée.

The brutal melee in Norfolk capped a year in which Skinheads were implicated in a number of cases of assault, battery, vandalism and harassment in Massachusetts. The occurrences were especially worrisome to hate crime experts in the area because Skinheads traditionally have been less active in the Northeast than in other parts of the country.

The situation in Massachusetts is merely one instance of a nationwide upsurge in alleged Skinhead activity. Researchers at Klanwatch have documented 51 crimes attributed to Skinheads in 1996, up from 29 in 1995. Law enforcement officers and human relations officials in communities throughout the United States are reporting the reappearance of large numbers of Skinheads in their communities. The young toughs are being blamed for criminal activity ranging from vandalism to murder.

Klanwatch identified 37 active Skinhead groups in 1996, up from 30 in 1995. A Skinhead group must have a name, the semblance of an organizational structure and adhere to white supremacist philosophy to be included on the list of active hate groups. (See page 19.)

The Skinhead group count is only one measure of activity by young racists. Many young Skinheads are aligning themselves directly with adult white supremacist groups like the National Alliance and Volksfront. Others are adopting the philosophy of the Skinhead movement, but foregoing its traditional clothing and hairstyles to avoid police scrutiny. White supremacist leaders have long urged this tactic.

A LITANY OF CRIME

The upsurge in Skinhead-related violence in 1996 reverses the trend of recent years when hate crime experts noted a marked decrease in activity by young racists. For example, law enforcement officials say that Skinhead activity in Portland, Ore. — once the center of the culture in the United States — was practically non-existent for the last three years but began reoccurring in summer, 1996. A news media source in central Oklahoma reports that Skinheads have been reappearing on the streets of Tulsa, after being absent for several years. After noting increased movement of young racists in the city’s suburbs, officers in Sacramento, Calif., are on alert for possible Skinhead violence. “It’s come back again,” says Officer Angel DelGadillos, intelligence officer for the Sacramento Police Department.

The problem is especially acute in California where Skinheads have been accused of crimes in virtually every part of the state, from suburban Los Angeles to the rural counties of the north. Other areas reporting a heightened degree of Skinhead activity include the Pacific Northwest, the Rocky Mountain States and the Midwest, especially Wisconsin. The more notable incidents in 1996 included:

- In the Antelope Valley area of suburban Los Angeles County, Skinheads have been blamed for a number of attacks on blacks. Skinheads were accused in the stabbing of a black teenager and the machete attack on a high school student whose family had fled to the suburb to escape inner-city violence in Los Angeles.

- In Huntington Beach, Calif., a gang of Skinheads confronted minorities hanging out on the city's fishing piers and asked if they believed in white power. When a Native American man tried to flee their approach, the thugs chased him down, and one of the group allegedly stabbed him 27 times in what officers called a "particularly frenzied" attack.

- In Redlands, Calif., a homeless man died after spending four months in a coma that resulted from a beating allegedly administered by four members of the United Bulldog Skins.

- In Fond du Lac, Wisc., a group of Skinheads sporting Nazi symbols were arrested after allegedly attacking a group of Hispanics. The incident began when the gang allegedly spat on a 10-year-old boy riding his bicycle.

- In Brockton, Mass., the 15-year-old son of a black police officer was allegedly attacked and beaten by a group of Skinheads as he was walking home from a football game.

- Skinheads in the Pacific Northwest have been charged with assaulting a black taxi-cab driver, harassing black teenagers and stabbing a white man who answered "no" when asked if he was proud of his race.

- Miami Beach police believe that a neo-Nazi skinhead gang is responsible for several cases of anti-Semitic graffiti in the city. They have arrested the leader of the South Miami Area Skin Heads in connection with the incident. He could be charged under Florida's hate-crime law.

These crimes display the usual elements of Skinhead-related behavior. The young punks operate in well-armed packs; they target Jews, minorities and disenfranchised people; and their response to confrontations is disproportionately violent, an outgrowth of the anger that consumes these alienated youth. For example, two Denver Skinheads were arrested after they savagely beat a man and shaved his head with animal shears. His scalp had to be stapled back in place.

SKINHEAD BREEDING GROUNDS

The Antelope Valley area of suburban Los Angeles is a virtual laboratory for understanding the increase in Skinhead violence. Located about 45 miles north of the city, Antelope Valley mushroomed in population in the last two decades as middle-class workers flocked to the tract homes that sprang up on the flat, barren landscape.

Today the suburban outpost is beset with serious economic problems. Residents are coping with unemployment resulting from the collapse of the area's defense economy. The Antelope Valley city of Palmdale has one of the highest rates of home foreclosures in the nation.

A soft real estate market is attracting inner-city blacks and other minorities who see in the Valley's pool of foreclosed homes the possibility of a new life away from the ghettos of Los Angeles. But the increasing ethnic diversity in Antelope Valley — coupled with the faltering economy — has created the conditions for social unrest. "You have no idea of the white rage in the Valley," says Borden Olive, who works for the Los Angeles County Human Relations Commission.

In summer 1996, the racial tension exploded into violence. Young Skinheads assaulted blacks in a series of incidents, the most notable being a machete attack on a 16-year old high school student. White residents reported that blacks were harassing them in retribution.

Other areas in California also reported a rash of Skinhead crimes. "There is an increase in [Skinhead] visibility and activity," says Fred Persily, director of the California Association of Human Relations Agencies. While most of the attention was focused on the state's urban areas, minority residents of rural California — especially the Native American population — reported a heightened level of concern about attacks from racist thugs.

The Skinhead incidents occurred during a period of deep racial division in the Golden State. As the young toughs were harassing minorities, their elders were engaged in a bitter debate over Proposition 209 banning racial and gender preferences and immigration restrictions aimed largely at persons of color. White supremacist Tom Metzger, who has long tried to forge alliances with young racists, predicts that Skinhead activity will increase in southern California as white youths act on adult complaints about the influx of immigrants.

Other parts of the country are also grappling with the complex problem caused by cultural diversification. Often the results are the same kind of youth violence that is plaguing California. In Rochester, Minn., for example, a youth gang calling itself the All-American Boys has been blamed for attacks on African immigrants to the city. Once an all-white bastion, Rochester is experiencing an influx of minorities attracted by the area's excellent quality of life.

For several years, criminologists have been predicting an increase in bias crime among young people in the United States. They blame it on violent entertainment, racial conflict in schools, the availability of hate-oriented material on the Internet and poor job prospects for young people. Crime data recently released in Pennsylvania, which has one of the nation's most comprehensive hate crime laws, indicates that two-thirds of all bias crime offenders in 1994 and 1995 were under 20, up from 56 percent in the five years previous.

The upsurge of Skinhead activity, as well as the appearance of other racially oriented gangs (see accompanying story), are the most visible example of this phenomenon. "Skinheads are an extreme manifestation of a general trend," says Brian Levin, associate professor of criminal justice at the Richard Stockton College of New Jersey and former associate director of Klanwatch.

In addition to demographic factors, the release from prison of a number of veteran Skinheads may be driving the renewed activity of racist white gangs. Intelligence officers in several cities on the West Coast report that ex-con Skinheads have returned to the streets and are playing an active role in organizing younger kids. "Whenever somebody goes to jail and comes out, violence increases," says T.J. Leyden, the former Skinhead who has been talking about his experiences under the auspices of the Simon Wiesenthal Center of Los Angeles.

The influence of these hardened racists on impressionable bands of youths represents a serious threat for law enforcement officers. They must remain on high alert when dealing with the emerging Skinhead groups. Notes Leyden: "These younger skins really see the cops as the enemy. It's really seen to be a badge of honor to cap [kill] a cop." ▲

Racist Youths Form Gangs

Skinhead groups were not the only youth gangs who planned or carried out violence against minorities in 1996. Others included:

The Lords of Chaos. Several members of this Fort Myers, Fla., youth gang, which calls itself an "anarchist militia," are accused of murder, armed robbery, arson and car theft. Documents uncovered after the arrest of Lords' members revealed the group's plans to kill blacks at Disney World. A journal prepared by group leaders contained racist images, among them a drawing of a black man tied to a burning cross surrounded by hooded Ku Klux Klan members. The drawing was captioned: "Black B-B-Q." Some members of the Lords of Chaos have IQs bordering on genius levels.

The Crew. In North Hanover, N.J., a loose-knit group of former high school friends are suspected in a series of hate crimes dating back several years. Members of The Crew are charged with carving a swastika into a corn field near this southern New Jersey city and are suspected of harassing black residents of the city. The apparent leader of the group was a Cornell University student at the time of his arrest.

Kevin Foster was ringleader of the Lords of Chaos, a Fort Myers, Fla., based youth gang.

The All-American Boys. Bias attacks are increasing in Rochester, Minn., where an influx of racial minorities is changing the social fabric of this predominantly white community. Members of a shadowy group known as the All-American Boys are suspected in several of the crimes. In late August, large groups of club-wielding white youths attacked black residents in two separate incidents. ▲

TOO BUSY TO HATE

RACIST GROUPS DECLINE AS ECONOMY ENJOYS PROSPERITY; PATRIOT MOVEMENT DEPLETING RANKS OF WHITE SUPREMACISTS

The number of white supremacist groups operating in the United States in 1996 declined, continuing a trend that began in the early 1990s. Klanwatch researchers documented 241 organizations involved in racist behavior last year, down from 262 in 1995.

Those figures cover organizations that participated in documented white supremacist activity — crimes, marches, rallies, meetings, leafleting, or publishing literature. Solo practitioners such as longtime white supremacists Louis Beam and Ed Fields are not included in the figure.

Klanwatch began monitoring white supremacist activities in 1981 and has published its annual list of groups since 1990. To compile the tally, researchers review hate groups' publications and Internet sites, consult with law enforcement officials and monitor news stories.

Low unemployment is a major factor contributing to the drop-off in hate group activity, according to Klanwatch Director Joe Roy. "We are enjoying a period of relative prosperity, but that can quickly change. These organizations flourish in times of economic uncertainty. A decline in the standard of living could result in the reemergence of groups that use minorities, ethnic groups and gays and lesbians as scapegoats for economic frustration."

Competition from the emerging Patriot movement is also contributing to declining membership in old-line white supremacist groups. "Militias, common-law courts and other Patriot organizations allow members to vent their anger in a manner that is more acceptable to mainstream America," Roy says.

Klanwatch does not include Patriot organizations in its list of hate groups, though some may be involved in racist or anti-Semitic behavior. A report on the current state of the Patriot movement will be included in a forthcoming special issue of the Intelligence Report.

A shift in strategy further complicates the task of identifying racist organizations. Hate groups, especially the Ku Klux Klan, are abandoning public appearances and visible displays in favor of clandestine actions. "Many members are simply taking a more low-key approach and spreading their hate in a more subtle fashion, says Roy. "This shift in focus makes it harder to identify active groups, but it does not reduce the damage they inflict on society."

From an illustration by Delores Figlioli

KLAN DECLINES

The Ku Klux Klan declined significantly in 1996, with 73 groups showing activity compared to 94 the year previous. This drop-off accelerated an ongoing trend: Klan numbers have been decreasing slowly for most of the decade.

Experts have long cited Thom Robb's Arkansas-based Knights of the Ku Klux Klan as the nation's largest Klan group. Its dominance may have ended, however, as only four states reflected activity by Knights chapters in 1996, down from 14 in 1995. Robb's Knights sponsored markedly fewer rallies in 1996, and turnout was poor at those they did hold.

The Alabama-based America's Invisible Empire Knights of the Ku Klux Klan experienced dramatic growth in 1996, with eight chapters in Alabama and one in Georgia showing activity. Only three chapters were active in 1995.

(For the purposes of this survey, only one chapter of a hate group per state is included in the total count of a hate group. Although this method of counting may understate the reach of a particular hate group within a state, it promotes accuracy in our annual nationwide survey.)

Neo-Nazi groups lost ground in 1996, after experiencing strong growth in 1995. Klanwatch identified 67 active neo-Nazi groups last year, down from 92 the year before. Aryan Nations, based in Hayden Lake, Idaho, had the largest number of chapters in this category, followed by the National Alliance, based in Hillsboro, W.Va.

Several white supremacist groups did experience notable gains in 1996. The National Association for the Advancement of White People (NAAWP) grew from eight chapters in 1995 to 18 in 1996. Founded by former Klansman David Duke in 1980, the NAAWP shares many of the racist doctrines of the Ku Klux Klan, but eschews its rituals and symbolism. Also posting an increase was the new World Church of the Creator, which now has chapters in 14 states.

Organized racist Skinhead groups also increased, rising from 30 active in 1995 to 37 in 1996.

The Klanwatch list of hate groups includes 13 groups that subscribe to the white supremacist religion called Christian Identity. It is especially difficult to identify these churches because members typically do not take part in documented activities like marches or rallies. In fact, there are many more Identity organizations in the country.

Klanwatch's annual report reveals only one aspect of white supremacist activity in the United States. Skinhead violence, for example, increased markedly in 1996, but many of the crimes were committed by unnamed and loosely organized gangs (See story, page 14). Likewise, cross burnings are up, nearly all committed by unaffiliated individuals and groups. Notes Roy, "As we saw in the church arsons, individuals often join together to commit hate crimes, even though they are not operating under the cloak of a group like the Klan. The number of organized hate groups in America is decreasing, but intolerance and bias crimes persist." ▲

The list of active hate groups is based on information gathered by Klanwatch from hate groups' publications, citizens' reports, law enforcement agencies, field sources and newspaper and magazine articles. Information from law enforcement officials and the public ensures a comprehensive, up-to-date list. Please send news on hate group activity and leadership changes to Klanwatch, 400 Washington Ave., Montgomery, Ala., 36104.

Groups are categorized as Klan, neo-Nazi, racist Skinhead or Identity. Listed under the heading "Other" are organizations whose racist behavior stems from a variety of unrelated ideologies. These groups include Ku Klux Klan offshoots, independent gangs of racist youths and religious groups that cloak their white supremacist beliefs in quasi-theological terms. Hate groups often shift leadership and locations rapidly. The 1996 list reflects current information in Klanwatch's database.

Only organizations that were known to be active in 1996, whether that activity included marches, rallies, meetings, leafleting, publishing literature or criminal activity, were counted in the listing. Though many organizations have multiple chapters in a given state (e.g., America's Invisible Empire has eight in Alabama), only one chapter per state is counted in this tally. Asterisks (*) indicate states where more than one chapter of an organization was active. For more information, contact Klanwatch investigators. See map on pages 20 & 21.

Dutchtown, MO • July 14, 1996

Michael Hunt, a black youth, was stabbed to death outside a tavern allegedly by a white man who shouted racial slurs. Two other men were wounded during the attack. The bias incidents here are drawn from media and law enforcement reports. They are only a snapshot of the crimes motivated by race, ethnicity, religion and sexual orientation that occurred during 1996. Statistics on hate crimes are unreliable, because many bias-motivated crimes are not reported to law enforcement, and law enforcement monitoring of hate crimes varies from state to state.

While Klanwatch does not provide a statistical analysis of hate crimes, numerical reports of hate crimes can be obtained from these agencies:

FBI Criminal Justice Information (202) 324-8901

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith (212) 490-2525

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (202) 332-6483

tack. One of three suspects, Mark Miner, 36, was charged with first-degree murder, three counts of armed criminal action and one count of ethnic intimidation.

A MESSAGE TO CENTER SUPPORTERS

Dear Center Supporter,

The articles in this Winter 1997 Intelligence Report provide powerful reminders of the importance of your support of the Center's work for justice and tolerance. In it you will find:

- ▲ A review of anti-government activity and terrorism in 1996, including the FBI siege of the Freeman in Montana and the conviction of militia leader Ray Lampley, his wife and two others for plotting to blow up the Southern Poverty Law Center;
- ▲ A chilling account of the growing threat of biochemical terrorism by "Patriot" extremists;
- ▲ An insightful report by several of the nation's leading terrorism experts on the potential for anti-government violence in the United States.

Your tax-deductible support of the Southern Poverty Law Center's work helped make this issue of the Intelligence Report possible, and enabled the Center to send it to over 6,500 members of law enforcement nationwide. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Joseph J. Levin, Jr.
President

P.S. When you have finished reading the Intelligence Report, I urge you to pass it on to members of local law enforcement who may not be receiving it, or to community groups which may benefit from the information it contains.
